

Tordrillo Mountain Lodge

Courtesy Tordrillo Mountain Lodge

At a Glance

One of the top luxury properties in Alaska, Tordrillo Mountain Lodge offers numerous onsite activities and modern amenities.

Indagare Loves

- The one- and two-bedroom standalone cabins
- The flexible options for dining and activities
- June's "Kings and Corn" program, when guests spend their days heli-skiing and King Salmon fishing

Review

Located on Lake Judd, Tordrillo Mountain Lodge is a luxurious playground for travelers of all ages and a one-stop shop for exploring Alaska's interior region. Conveniently located less than one hour from Anchorage by plane, the lodge still has a remote wilderness feel. Guests can stay in cozy, cabin-like bedrooms with ensuite baths. The top accommodations are the four private cabins, with separate sitting areas, floor-to-ceiling windows, glass fireplaces, small private decks and a more upscale, contemporary aesthetic. Additional facilities include a 500-bottle wine cellar, a peaceful yoga studio and a fitness center.

The customizable activity schedule enables all visitors to craft a one-of-a-kind experience during their stay. Guests can indulge in on-property jet skiing, wakeboarding, skeet shooting, mountain biking and more. Tordrillo Mountain Lodge's multitude of excursions (some of which are heli-based) satisfy a wide variety of interests: whether fishing, river rafting, glacier trekking or via ferrata climbing, several days of adventure are easily filled here. The lodge's "Kings and Corn" program also sets it apart from other Alaskan properties. In June, guests can spend their days heli-skiing and fishing for King Salmon, a 20-year tradition that takes advantage of Alaska's midnight sun for five nights of non-stop outdoor adventure.

Who Should Stay

Active travelers looking for on-property amenities and activities, along with relatively easy access to great wilderness and reliable, high-speed internet in the Interior.

- Sasha Feldman on August 29, 2018

